RECORDS' CONTEXT

Name of creators: Caithness County Commissioners of Supply; Caithness County Road Trustees; Caithness Parish Councils, Parochial Boards and School Boards (Bower, Canisbay, Dunnet, Halkirk, Latheron, Olig, Reay, Thurso, Watten, Wick); Caithness County Council; Caithness District Councils (North, South, East, West, Central); individual schools pre-dating Caithness County Council

Administrative history: 1889-1930

County Councils were established under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889. They assumed the powers of the Commissioners of Supply, and of Parochial Boards, excluding those in Burghs, under the Public Health Acts. The County Councils also assumed the powers of the County Road Trusts, and as a consequence were obliged to appoint County Road Boards. Powers of the former Police Committees of the Commissioners were transferred to Standing Joint Committees, composed of County Councillors, Commissioners and the Sheriff of the county. They acted as the police committee of the counties - the executive bodies for the administration of police. The Act thus entrusted to the new County Councils most existing local government functions outwith the burghs except the poor law, education, mental health and licensing.

Each county was divided into districts administered by a District Committee of County Councillors. Funded directly by the County Councils, the District Committees were responsible for roads, housing, water supply and public health.

Provision was also made for the creation of Special Districts to be responsible for the provision of services including water supply, drainage, lighting and scavenging.

1930-1975

The Local Government Act (Scotland) 1929 abolished the District Committees and Parish Councils and transferred their powers and duties to the County Councils and District Councils (see CC/6).

1975-date

County Councils were abolished in 1975 and replaced in Highland by a two-tier system: the Highland Regional Council and eight district councils (Caithness was served by the Caithness District Council).

In 1996 this system was in turn abolished and replaced by the single, unitary Highland Council.

Education

The Education (Scotland) Act 1872 transferred the powers and duties of the heritors and ministers of each parish relating to education to School Boards, elected by ratepayers, for every Parish and Burgh (see CC/5/4). The Education (Scotland) Act 1918 abolished School Boards and replaced them with elected Education Authorities, on a county basis, vesting in them the management of education, as bodies corporate (see CC/5/1). In addition, the Act provided for the appointment of School Management Committees, representative of the Authority, parents and teachers. Necessary funds were channelled from rating income to the Committees via the Parish Councils (see CC/5/5). Their responsibilities were largely confined to the enforcement of attendance. The Education Authorities were abolished by the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929 and replaced by Education Committees, appointed by County or Town Councils and comprising at least a majority of Council members, together with a specified number of people experienced in education (see CC/5/8). In 1947 the School Management Committees were replaced by Sub-committees of the Education Committee.

Poor Law

The Poor Law (Scotland) Act 1845 established parochial boards in rural parishes and in towns to administer poor relief (see CC/7). In 1894 they were abolished and replaced by wholly elected parish councils, but with their functions practically unchanged. Parish Councils were in turn abolished in 1930 under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929, and their functions transferred to county councils and large burghs, acting through Departments of Public Assistance (or Public Welfare). In 1948 the existing poor law was entirely abolished and almost all of it replaced by a national system, the forerunner of the modern 'social security' (National Insurance Act 1948).

Poorhouses

Although the 1845 Act allowed parishes to operate poorhouses, it did not require them to do so as was the case in England and Wales. Adjacent Scottish parishes could also join together to form "Combinations" and operate Combination poorhouses.

There were two in Caithness: the Latheron Combination Poorhouse, built c.1854 for the parishes of Latheron and Wick (see CC/7/5/9); and Thurso Combination, built c.1854-6 for the 8 parishes of Bower, Canisbay, Dunnet, Halkirk, Olig, Reay, Thurso and Watten (see CC/7/8/9). In addition, a locally administered parochial poorhouse or almshouse was operated by the parish of Dunnet from at least the early 1870s.

CC/1	Commissioners of Supply Commissioners of Supply were local administrative bodies in Scotland from 1667 to 1930. From 1718 they became responsible, along with justices of the peace, for county roads and bridges, and in 1832 they were charged with raising "rogue money" for the keeping of the peace. By the Police (Scotland) Act 1857 they were required to establish a county police force in all areas outside police burghs from 1858. In 1890 virtually all of the powers and duties of the commissioners passed to the newly created county councils. The commissioners continued to exist, however, meeting once a year to elect a convener and to appoint members to the Joint Standing Committee that was responsible for the county constabulary. Commissioners of Supply were finally abolished in 1930 by the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929.	1720-1929

CC/2	Highway Authorities Caithness County Council was established by the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889. Prior to that the responsibility for the maintenance of roads had been held by different bodies. The earliest statutory provisions for the maintenance of roads in Scotland from 1617 onwards imposed duties on the Justices of the Peace. In 1669 a further act of parliament introduced the system of forced labour (or 'statute labour') for roads maintenance. Statute labour was effective, at least in some rural areas, but was naturally unpopular. To remedy the defects of personal statute labour, counties or smaller areas obtained local acts of parliament for its abolition and the appointment of bodies of 'statute labour trustees'. The trustees would impose a local tax and spend the proceeds on road maintenance. The Road Trustees of the County of Caithness were appointed in 1815 by a local Act of Parliament for 'making effectual the statute labour and for levying conversion money in lieu in certain cases and for otherwise making, repairing and regulating High Roads and Bridges in the County of Caithness'. The Road Act 1845 standardised the system and allowed it to be applied generally. In the early 19th century highway construction and maintenance was often the responsibility not only of statute labour trustees, but also of Commissioners of Supply (see CC/1), turnpike trusts and Justices of the Peace (CC/3/7). The inconvenience of this system led several counties to obtain local acts for the abolition of turnpike trusts and statute labour assessments, in favour of a single county road trust, which would then be responsible for all public roads in the landward area. In Caithness the Caithness Road Trust was established by 'An Act for more effectually making maintaining and keeping in repair the Highways Roads and Bridges within the County of Caithness and for other purposes' 1860. The Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Act 1878 abolished the remaining statute labour trusts and assessments and placed all turnpike roads, statute labour roads, highways and bridges under the control of a single county road trust. County road trusts were abolished in 1890 and their duties assumed by county councils acting through district committees (Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889) - see also CC/10 - Roads Department.	1815-1915

CC/3/7	Licencing Committee (also known as Justices of the Peace) The Justices of the Peace first came into existence in Scotland in 1587 (Criminal Justice Act 1587). Later Justices of the Peace Acts of 1609 and 1661 dealt with the powers and functions of the office. JPs did not become an important administrative force until the eighteenth century. The Act of Union in 1707 (Act for rendering the Union of the Two Kingdoms more entire and complete) led to an attempt at extending the powers enjoyed by the English Justices of the Peace to Scotland, but in Scotland JPs never obtained the prominence that they had in England. JPs had civil and criminal jurisdiction, wide-ranging but not dealing with serious business. The criminal jurisdiction was mostly confined to preservation of the public peace, with sheriff courts achieving dominance in criminal matters. Civil jurisdiction included the power to regulate the wages and conditions of servants and other rural workmen. The Small Debt Court was an important extension of their judicial role (following an Act of Parliament in 1795, confirmed by the Small Debt Act 1800), which permitted the suing for debts of only a few pounds, but the loss of small debt jurisdiction to sheriff courts in 1825 led to a decline in JPs' court business. General administrative business included oversight of weights and measures, roads, and carting regulations; and later the JPs' role extended to militia recruitment, administration (albeit limited) of the poor law and vagrancy, theatre and friendly society licensing, and early factory safety legislation. Licensing had been the remit of JPs from the start but they only had the right to grant licences to sellers of ales and spirits, not the right to take them away. The Alehouses Licensing Act 1756 gave JPs more specific powers over licensing. They were to hold an annual session to grant and renew licences outside royal burghs, which after 1765 were held regularly after the introduction of an annual inspection of licensing records by the government. Separate licensing court records are commonly found. The Liquor Licensing (Scotland) Act 1828 gave the justices the power to divide counties into districts for the purposes of licensing. In the nineteenth century the Justices of the Peace functions tended to decline. The Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889 transferred many of their administrative powers to the new county councils	1833-1975

	including the regulation of weights and measures and gas meters, but left their licensing and judicial powers unchanged. Their remaining administrative powers comprised licensing of tradesmen (eg pawnbrokers) and proprietors where a fee was paid, which included game dealers and gunpowder retailers. Under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1903 Licensing Courts were to be constituted, whose membership would (in counties) be partly JPs and partly elected councillors. The Children Act 1908 gave certain powers to JPs to deal in criminal cases of children under 16. The Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act 1932 further strengthened JPs' role in juvenile courts. The children's hearing system replaced juvenile courts as a result of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. The District Courts (Scotland) Act 1975 (c.20) established district courts with wider powers, in which JPs sit, with a legally qualified clerk to provide advice. Justice of the Peace courts were abolished on 16 May 1975 by this Act. The district courts are based on local authority areas and financed by the relevant local authority. The Justices of the Peace were originally appointed by the king and his council, and office-holders were mostly drawn from major families, although no particular qualification in rank or property was required. From 1707 JPs were appointed by the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, but in 1955 this duty was transferred to the Secretary of State for Scotland by the Transfer of Functions (Justices of the Peace) (Scotland) Order, 1955, no. 240. Landowners continued to be heavily represented as a group amongst JPs. The whole of the JPs in a county made up the commission of the peace. JPs sat at four different types of session: general, petty, special and quarter sessions. Quarter sessions were meetings of all justices in the county, occurring four times a year on specific dates to hear cases and make administrative decisions. From 1741 these meetings were to be held in the head burgh of the county. Petty sessions were held as required during the year. General sessions were adjourned quarter sessions, and special sessions were quarter session meetings but for a specific piece of business. Not all JP courts were well organised, however, which has impacted on the quality and quantity of surviving record.

CC/3/12	Registers of Motor Cars Under the Motor Car Act of 1903, county councils (and some larger burghs) in Scotland were responsible for keeping registers of motor cars and issuing licences. In 1919 the Roads Act was passed and vehicle registration in the UK was placed under the newly-formed Ministry of Transport, but administration of the system remained with county councils and larger burghs. In 1969 the Vehicle and Driving Licences Act centralised the system under the DVLC (Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre) in Swansea, but some authorities maintained their own records until as late as 1978.	1903-1972

CC/4	Treasurer's Department Treasury involves the management of money and financial risks. The Treasurer's Department's priority was to ensure the council had the money it needed to manage its day-to-day business obligations, while also helping develop its long term financial strategy and policies. Abstracts of accounts are a published, condensed summary of the council's annual accounts. The Lands Valuation (Scotland) Act, 1854 established a uniform valuation of landed property throughout Scotland, with separate rolls compiled for each county and royal burgh from 1855-1989. The valuation rolls that continue after 1989 are only for businesses that pay non-domestic rates. The rolls from 1854 to 1988 were collected annually and for each property record the name and designation of the proprietor, the tenant, the occupier and the annual rateable value. The purpose of valuation rolls was to allow local authorities to have access to an accurate survey of the ownership, tenancy and occupancy of all properties (except those exempted) within each county or parliamentary burgh, to allow rates (local taxation based on rental value of properties) to be levied annually by local authorities (such as county councils, town councils, parochial boards and school boards) to levy local rates for services like poor relief, education, policing and public health. The Assessor in each county or parliamentary burgh had to draw up a valuation roll by 15 August each year, to allow appeals by any owners and occupiers who disputed the rateable values by 15 September following. Once the appeal process had ended, the resulting roll was authenticated and was made available for public inspection. The roll was in force from Whitsunday in the year of collection to the Whitsunday following. In Scotland the legal quarter day of Whitsunday (or whitsun) was fixed at 15 May. Valuation Rolls have been catalogued under CC/4 Treasurer's Department as per the Scottish Record Office schema c.1960s, and to ensure consistency with other local authority catalogues. Please note that the Valuation Rolls would have been drawn up by the Assessor (CC/12).	1855-1975

CC/5/4	School Boards The Education (Scotland) Act 1872 created School Boards in Scotland with a statutory duty to provide education for all children between the ages of 5 and 13. The Boards had an elected membership made up of owners and occupiers of property of the value of £4 or over. They were responsible for the building and maintenance of schools, staffing and attendance of pupils. They were overseen by the Scotch Board of Education. The Scotch Education Department was created to take over the running of all schools from the Church of Scotland. The department's offices were initially based in London but by 1918 objections were raised in Scotland and the department transferred to Edinburgh, being renamed the Scottish Education Department. School boards were abolished by the Education (Scotland) Act 1918 and replaced by Education Authorities and School Management Committees (see CC/5/1 and CC/5/5).	1873-1918

Wick and Thurso Libraries began as separate endeavours within each respective town. The establishment of both libraries was influenced by the passing of the Public Libraries Act (Scotland) 1867.

The individual beginnings and development of each library service are detailed below.

Following the adoption of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929 both services were administered by the Caithness County Council Education Committee and later the Highland Regional Council (1975-1995) and The Highland Council (1996-).

Wick Library

Pre-1888

In 1843 the Librarian for Wick and Pulteneytown Subscription Library was recorded as William Craig, Postmaster in Wick. The library occupied a room in Ashley House. In 1887 the Wick and Pulteneytown Subscription Library adopted the Free Library Act in Wick to become Wick Parish Free Public Library and their library was relocated to Union Street in 1888, to a building formerly used as the Telegraph Department of the postal services.

1888-1898

The position of librarian was advertised on 2 Mar 1888, with George Bain later being appointed. On 1 Oct 1891 a meeting of the Library Committee was called to hear a statement from Rev. George Renny.

Rev. Renny had a conversation with Mr. Andrew Carnegie, while staying with a friend down south. Mr. Carnegie expressed an interest in Wick Free Library. Rev. Renny told Mr. Carnegie about the Library Committee's idea to build a new library. Mr. Carnegie advised the Building Committee to forget remember him when applying for help.

A Carnegie library is a library built with money donated by Scottish-American businessman and philanthropist Andrew Carnegie. A total of 2,509 Carnegie libraries were built between 1883 and 1929, including some belonging to public and university library systems. 1,689 were built in the United States, 660 in the United Kingdom and Ireland, 125 in Canada, and others in Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Serbia, Belgium, France, the Caribbean, Mauritius, Malaysia, and Fiji.

After much planning, negotiation, discussion and fundraising the Foundation Stone was laid on 27 Mar 1897 by Hew Morrison, Esq., chief librarian, Edinburgh Public Library. The total cost of the buildings when complete is estimated at £4500, not inclusive of the site, which was valued at £500.

On 6 Sep 1898 the Wick Parish Carnegie Library was officially opened by Professor Masson. The Northern Ensign reported that 'The ceremony of opening of the Library took place at half-past one o'clock. The building was profusely decorated with flags under the superintendence of Mr Teeling R.N., who had assistance of Coastguardsmen Kelly and Gearing, and William Macdonald and Hector Nicolson, fishermen. Conspicuous above the others was a combination of flags displaying the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes'.

The library continued to be run through the parish council until Aug 1930. Minutes of the last meeting of Wick Parish Carnegie Free Public Library state that 'as the Wick Parish Council has been superseded by the County Council, the Parish Library would be administered by the Council through the Education Committee'.

1930-present

Following the adoption of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929 the library was administered by Caithness County Council. At this time it became part of Caithness County Library (incorporating Wick and Thurso Public Libraries). The County Librarian was based in Wick.

From the library was administered 1975 by Highland Regional Council and from 1996 by The Highland Council.

The library building also accommodated the Wick Heritage Centre until 1979 until it moved to new premises in Bank Row.

From 1995 until 2017 the Carnegie building was also the home of the Caithness Archive Centre, which is now a part of Nucleus: The Nuclear and Caithness Archives in Wick.

Thurso Library

Establishment

In January 1872 ten householders in the District of Thurso requested 'unto the Honourable the Sheriff of the Sheriffdom of Caithness, Orkney and Shetland, or his Substitutes' to convene a meeting of householders concerning the Public Libraries Act (Scotland) 1867. Several meetings in the Court House of Thurso followed which led to the adoption of the Act in the District, it was one of the first in Scotland to do so. The Thurso Public Library was in this way established.

A Free Library Committee was formed. The committee was a statutory body possessed of the powers and bound to discharge the duties specified in Section 21 of the Act. It was supervised by Thurso Town Council from which it was also financed. The library operated out of a small space set up in part of the Town Hall.

Carnegie Library

In 1904 the committee approached Andrew Carnegie with the hope of establishing a new library building. A total of 2,509 Carnegie libraries were built between 1883 and 1929, including some belonging to public and university library systems. 1,689 were built in the United States, 660 in the United Kingdom and Ireland, 125 in Canada, and others in Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Serbia, Belgium, France, the Caribbean, Mauritius, Malaysia, and Fiji.

Their plea proved successful with Carnegie pledging £2,000. The committee then set about deciding upon a site for the library, this took some time, however it was finally decided to purchase and demolish a house next to the Town Hall. The library was built predominantly by local labour, taking just under 2 years to build.

Its opening on the 15th of September 1910 was a grand affair. Carnegie, his wife, his daughter and a group of friends arrived by rail to be greeted by the town's dignitaries and a large crowd lining the High Street. Mrs Carnegie formally opened the library and was presented with a silver key. After the opening ceremony the Town Council and the Carnegies retired to the Town Hall where an address of thanks was given. The interior of the library consisted of a large room to the ground floor where the books were displayed, and a reading room to the rear. The library possessed open shelves so that readers could browse the books, this was quite a novel approach, as many libraries operated a closed shelf system.

	Following the adoption of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929 the Thurso Library was leased to Caithness County Council on behalf of the County Education Committee by the Thurso Town Council. At this time it became part of Caithness County Library (incorporating Wick and Thurso Public Libraries). The County Librarian was based in Wick. The Miller Institution The Miller Institution, built between 1859 and 1862, was founded by Alexander Miller. Miller, a Thurso native was initially a merchant in the town before he turned to farming. Miller inherited a sizeable inheritance from his uncle, a South American merchant, and part of this money he used to establish the Miller Institution, later known as the Miller Academy. In the 1960s the Thurso Library was moved from the building next to the Town Hall to the newly refurbished Miller Institute. From 1975 the Library was administered by Highland Regional Council and from 1996 by The Highland Council. It remains in the Miller building on Davidson's Lane (2024). [Information sourced from the original records held within the Caithness Archive and from Historic Environment Scotland]

CC/6	District Councils (100 Year Closure Period Applies) District Councils were formed under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929, which abolished district committees, standing joint committees, commissioners of supply, parish councils, education authorities and other bodies, and transferred all or most of their functions to county councils. The Act required county councils to draw up a scheme of district councils, to be composed partly of directly elected district councillors and partly of the county councillors from electoral divisions within the district. District councils had various responsibilities delegated to them by the county council. These might include the letting of houses, the upkeep of cemeteries and, until 1948, the poor law. District councils also administered special districts or committees responsible for certain functions such as scavenging or water supply, financed by additional rates. District councils were abolished in 1975 by the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973.	1930-1975

Parish Records

(100 year closure period applies)

Civil parishes in Scotland can be dated from 1845, when parochial boards were established to administer the poor law. While they originally corresponded to the parishes of the Church of Scotland, the number and boundaries of parishes soon diverged. Where a parish contained a burgh, such as Wick, a separate landward parish was formed for the portion outside the town. In 1891, under the terms of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889, the boundaries of most of the civil parishes and counties were realigned so that each parish was wholly within a single county.

In 1894 the parochial boards were replaced by more democratically elected parish councils. These were in turn abolished in 1930, under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929, and replaced by the larger District Councils (CC/6).

The Poor Law in Scotland after 1845

The Poor Law (Scotland) Act 1845 established parochial boards in rural parishes and in the towns, and a central Board of Supervision in Edinburgh. The system of poor rates spread more widely, although it was still not universal even in the 1860s. The parochial boards built poorhouses for those categories of paupers who did not receive 'outdoor relief', normally in the form of small weekly sums of money. More often parishes combined to build 'combination poorhouses'. During the second half of the century government increasingly found it convenient to give added powers to parochial boards, such as the registration of births, deaths and marriages, and in particular public health. In 1894 they were abolished and replaced by wholly elected parish councils, but with their functions practically unchanged. The trade depression of the 1920s led to the abandonment of the rule that the unemployed were not entitled to poor relief (Poor Law Emergency Powers (Scotland) Act 1921). Thereafter the parishes usually kept separate series of records of poor law applications, distinguishing 'Ordinary' applications for relief from those from the 'Able-Bodied'. The parish system had several inherent defects. One was

	a tendency for levels of relief to vary between different councils. Another was the level of disputes, often litigation, between parishes as to which was responsible for the maintenance of an individual pauper or pauper family. Larger authorities were needed, partly to bring a measure of standardisation and partly to ensure that the burden of poor relief was spread more equitably. In 1930 parish councils were abolished (Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929). Thereafter the poor law authorities were to be the county councils, large burghs and the four cities, acting through Departments of Public Assistance (or Public Welfare). Scottish Poorhouses Poorhouses or almshouses have existed in Scotland since medieval times, principally in burghs. Between 1845 and 1930 over 70 poorhouses were constructed in Scotland, many serving a number of parishes (called 'poor law unions' or 'combinations'). They were built following the Poor Law (Scotland) Act 1845, which established parochial boards in rural parishes and in the towns, and a central Board of Supervision in Edinburgh. The regime, diet and living conditions in poorhouses were austere, partly to discourage applications from those who could rely on family support instead. On the other hand poorhouses provided medical and nursing care of the elderly and the sick, at a time when there were few hospitals and private medical treatment was beyond the means of the poor. In 1948 the poor law was abolished and replaced by the modern social security system, and by then hospitals had largely replaced the medical function of poorhouses. Many poorhouses, indeed, expanded to become hospitals. Others became old people's homes or social work administrative offices.

CC/7/5/9	Combination Poorhouse The Latheron Combination was formed in around 1853 and comprised the parishes of Latheron and Wick, the poorhouse was located at the east side of the Causewaymire Road to the north of Latheron at Braehungie. It was erected in the late 1850s and could accommodate up to 50 inmates. In 1924, the poorhouse became known as the Latheron and Wick Town and County Home, subsequently the Caithness Town and County Home. Following its closure in 1947, its functions were transferred to Forse House, which operated as a residential care home up until 2016. [see also CC/6/2/9/1]	1863-1960

CC/7/8/9	Combination Poorhouse The Thurso Combination Poorhouse was formed in about 1853 and comprised the 8 parishes of Bower, Canisbay, Dunnet, Halkirk, Olrick (Olrig), Reay, Thurso and Watten. The Poorhouse was built in 1854-6 on a five-acre site at the west side of the Thurso Road to the north of Halkirk. The poorhouse closed in May 1917 with the majority of residents being transferred to the Latheron Town and Country Home. In 1924, the poorhouse building was sold, having stood empty for several years; it was eventually converted into housing.	1860-1925

CC/10	Roads Department Caithness County Council was established by the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889. County road trusts were abolished in 1890 and their duties assumed by county councils acting through district committees (Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889). In Caithness the County District Committee for Roads was established. The Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929 abolished district committees and transferred all or most of their functions to county councils. Maintenance of county roads and bridges was supervised by the Roads Department. County councils were abolished in 1975 and their powers transferred to regional, islands and district councils (Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973). CC/12	Assessor's Department [For Valuation Rolls please see CC/4/2. See also CC/6/2/8 Southern District Council Assessors Department] The Lands Valuation (Scotland) Act, 1854 established a uniform valuation of landed property throughout Scotland, with separate rolls compiled for each county and royal burgh from 1855-1989. The valuation rolls that continue after 1989 are only for businesses that pay non-domestic rates. The rolls from 1854 to 1988 were collected annually and for each property record the name and designation of the proprietor, the tenant, the occupier and the annual rateable value. The purpose of valuation rolls was to allow local authorities to have access to an accurate survey of the ownership, tenancy and occupancy of all properties (except those exempted) within each county or parliamentary burgh, to allow rates (local taxation based on rental value of properties) to be levied annually by local authorities (such as county councils, town councils, parochial boards and school boards) to levy local rates for services like poor relief, education, policing and public health. The Assessor in each county or parliamentary burgh had to draw up a valuation roll by 15 August each year, to allow appeals by any owners and occupiers who disputed the rateable values by 15 September following. Once the appeal process had ended, the resulting roll was authenticated and was made available for public inspection. The roll was in force from Whitsunday in the year of collection to the Whitsunday following. In Scotland the legal quarter day of Whitsunday (or whitsun) was fixed at 15 May. Valuation Rolls have been catalogued under CC/4 Treasurer's Department as per the Scottish Record Office schema c.1960s, and to ensure consistency with other local authority catalogues. Please note that the Valuation Rolls would have been drawn up by the Assessor.	-
